Everyone, right from a humanities graduate to an engineer or a commerce executive, aspire for an MBA degree. Just after the admission, students are taught main subjects, personality development, understanding human psychology as well as the functioning of the economy. A management degree not only helps to find a lucrative job but also makes you a more mature individual as you are taught to manage people and situations.

In today's corporate world, getting a management degree is crucial for attaining seniormost position in good organizations. Earning a MBA degree not only promises an individual a secure job but also ensures him growth and success in today's job market.

Most MBA programmes provide you with training in basic business principles needed by any manager including, corporate finance, economics, strategic planning, marketing and basic accounting. However, if you know which career field you are interested in, selecting a specific MBA programme will allow you to specialise and better prepare yourself for a career.

Much like any other educational institution, the academic content of a business school education does not vary much between programmes. However, experts will tell you that the value of your MBA degree is often directly related to the esteem of the school which grants it. All MBA schools annualy receive rankings from various organisations. These rankings are determined by a variety of factors and can be very useful when choosing a business school or MBA programme.

Eligibility Criteria: The minimum eligibility criterion for admission is at least a 3-year bachelor's degree with at least 50 per cent marks or equivalent (45 per cent for SC/ST or persons with disability (PWD) category, of any of the Universities (please check specifications) or possess an equivalent qualification recognised by the Ministry of HRD, Government of India.
